making the grade!

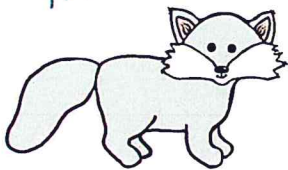

Wintery Fun Facts

At -40 degrees Fahrenheit, the condensation from your breath can actually freeze- it will not evaporate. Instead of a little cloud that quickly evaporates, your breath at -40 degrees will look like smoke.

Plants actually require exposure to cold winter temperatures in order to begin flowering again the following spring. This process is called "vernalization".

The arctic fox has a beautiful white (sometimes blue-gray) coat that acts as a very effective winter camouflage. When the seasons change, the fox's coat changes as well to a brown or gray color depending on the season. This provides cover among the summer tundra's rocks and plants.
